

Eating out

Have you experienced Nando's yet?

By Lola Aroun

If the answer is no but you like your food spicy, tasty and hot then get down to your nearest Nando's restaurant.

Due the pressures of work stomachs were rumbling after no time to feed all day! So the Enterprise decided to give Nando's of Wood Green in North London a late spin. We found the initial food service original for a restaurant; in that, 1. we ordered and paid for our food at one of the large counters then 2. the next stop was to collect our cutlery, eating utensils, drinks and seek out our table, which we found in a dim lit cosy corner. Each time that I visit Nando's it has been busy with a good family atmosphere although if you were to go out for a candlelit dinner for two or a business dinner, you would not feel out of place. You do tend to have to wait a while for your food but the wait is worth it, especially when you get service with a smile and waiters going the extra mile for you. Anyway on top of that you get to have as much soft drink as you like so who's complaining when there is freeness going round. But, remember too much fizzy stuff gives you wind! We must have been asked about 3 times whether we were ok, maybe it was my good looks and warm charm that attracted the attention! Anyway, the peri peri chicken which was marinated and charcoal grilled with a variety of seasonings was delectable, very succulent, not dry and very tasteful. It was a good thing that we ordered half a chicken each because it really was that good and I was not about to share mine with anybody that evening (not that I usually do). If you want to fill your stomach with something wholesome and good tasting try their good old French fries, finely seasoned coleslaw salad and their braised vegetable rice. Nando's also boast a range of delicious sauce dips which seem to have become Nando's speciality because there is simply no dip like a Nando's dip and there is no place like Nando's really.

Venus & Serena to rule the world

American tennis sensations Venus and Serena Williams' sensations, will look back on chosen sport and probably say;

'Now for the Australian Open'

As the year comes to a close, the true American dream team, continued their amazing domination by striking gold at the Sydney Olympics.

With many of the worlds top ranked stars taking a break from their ATP program, Venus showed, once again, why she is the undisputed world No 1 and with sister Serena by her side, the Williams girls look to have the tennis world locked down for years to come.
